About Hyderabad

Hyderabad, the capital city of Andhra Pradesh, consists of the twin cities of Hyderabad and Secunderabad. An imaginary line drawn across the Tank Bund is still used to distinguish the two cities. A bustling 400-year-old metropolis with an urban population of 6 million people approximately, Hyderabad was formerly the seat of the fabulously wealthy Nizams. Surrounded by huge prehistoric rock formations, the city is a blend of cutting edge IT companies and well preserved cultural heritage, a pot-pourri of old and the new. Hyderabad invokes nostalgia among old residents for its culture, fine arts and certain sophistication in manners. Much more than anything, it presents a true picture of secularism. Hyderabad is the fifth largest cosmopolitan city in India.

Climate

Hyderabad enjoys three main seasons: summer, monsoon and winter. Summers are pretty warm, starting from March and running through June; whereas winters are pleasant, starting from November till February. Light clothing for summer and a sweater or jacket for winter are recommended.

Temperatures

The average temperatures at Hyderabad vary :

- August - October 26.0 °C
- November - January 22.0 °C
- February - March 28.0 °C

Food

Hyderabad is known for its varied and exquisite cuisine. The local food is quite spicy; continental, Chinese and other kinds of food are available in many restaurants. The varieties of fruit available include bananas, apples, grapes, oranges, mangoes, and melons (in season).

Language

Though Telugu is the language of the state, English, Hindi and Urdu are understood and spoken by majority of the people. Knowing these languages is a distinct advantage while dealing with the local population in shops and business places, and while using public transport. Multilingual translation books are available at the Institute library.
